HERE LIES THE BODY OF ANTHONY DWYER OF YE PARISH 1744 of ST CANICE
HEPARTED THIS LIFE D- 14th 1744 A. 34
This survey of the 500 inscribed tombs in the Church Yard of St. Canice's Cathedral was made by 2 members of the Kilkenny Archaeological Society, at different times during the years 1953, '54, '55 and '56. They don't claim to be infallible in the reading of the tombs, but they did their task with patience and a genuine desire to be correct.

A great many matters were learnt from reading the tombs - and here are set out roughly as follows:-

The tombs date mostly from middle 18th to middle 19th century, and commemorate the middle class Irish man, not the aristocrat of either Church or state. The ordinary Irishman had taken the best part of 100 years to recover from the Cromwellian Invasion sufficiently to raise a tombstone. The earliest of the tombstones of this period are simple standing stones, with, sometimes, a little ornamentation. Sometimes they tell of the trades of their occupants, clothiers, saddlers, tanners, victuallers, glaziers. For the most part, they give only the name, neither the occupation or address. Yet the inhabitants of Irishtown frequently enough mentions it - One member of the Corporation of Irishtown records it on his tomb.

The aristocracy of both Church and State returned to bury in St. Canices from about the first quarter of the 19th century till to-day. Thus we have Bishops Dineen, Hamilton, C'Uirlin, Day, Tichborne, Deans Byrne and Vigoles, the Blundens, de Montmorencys, Darblies, Poos, Hartfords, Prins, etc.

The graveyard was used by both Catholic and Protestant without distinction of place. Roughly speaking, the earlier tombstones, from names and inscriptions appear to be Catholic. These stones date 1700-1800. (There is only one dated earlier, 1690 - John Myard.) From 1800 on (perhaps after restoration of Bishop Pococke) the tombs appear to belong to the Protestant Community.

A small child was often given an imposing monument e.g., Empson's p. 74 No. 3 Murphy's p. 6 No. 32 Burney's p. 13 No. 13.

The number of children who died young was appalling. The Cody tomb Page 12, No. 10 seems to be the worst. It cites - "30 of their children who died young," but see also Pages 15, 16.

Christian names of women on these tombs are vastly different from the ordinary Irishwoman of today. There are no Sheilas, Eileen's, Cathleen's etc. on these stones - but Catherine's, Anastasias, Joanna's, Rebecca's and Margaret's. The surnames rarely carried the prefix "O" now so familiar to us. In only 11 tombs out of the 500 does the "O" occur.

There are two centenarians recorded -
Job Whittle Tomb 74 Page 11 who lived to be 127, and Catherine Nowlan, tomb 91 Page 37 who lived to be 123.

The names of most of the tomb makers are unrecorded, but toward the end of the 19th century and onwards we get the following names - Nolan, Kilkenny (Irishtown) O'Sha of Callan, Callan of Maddoxtown, Dunn of Callan, Gorgan of Kilkenny and Brennan of Kilkenny.
Most of the occupants of the tombs have left no impression on the history of the town. Yet a few are worth mentioning. - William Stokes (tomb No. 20 Page No. 14) may have been of the family of printers who printed De Burgo's "Hibernia Domenica." Connell Loughman held the chair for the pro-union meeting of Kilkenny men in 1800. His mural tomb is on the Dean's gate. Henry Shee of Irishtown was the father of Peter Shee, first recorder of the tombs within St. Canices, and himself a printer. His is an altar tomb near South entrance No. 149 Page 44. Anthony Blunt Cartwright must have been named for the Mayor of Kilkenny who gained ignominy for himself by taking down the Market Cross in 1771. Tomb No. 29 Page 14. The Prin family are buried on the high bank, near the Loreto wall. Here too is the Rev. James Graves - His Celtic Cross is very fine and is copied in part from the Ahenny and Killamery crosses. Richard Langrishe was its designer in 1886. James Graves, with Prin, was founder of the old Kilkenny Archaeological Society and, for 37 years, its secretary.

The family who has most tombs appears to be the Nowlands of Glendine. These are closely followed in number by the Bibbys, the Smithwicks, the Purcells, the Ellises, and the Hartfords.

Every assistance possible was given to the tomb readers at their self-appointed task by the clergy and sexton of St. Canices Cathedral - This made the task very much easier and the workers were really grateful for all the kind co-operation.
